The comfortable scenes of mother and child, the quiet moments on country lanes acceptance of these now celebrated works did not come easy for the impressionists, a group of artists who broke from tradition. Impressionism rejected the strict techniques and conservative themes preferred by the Académie des Beaux-Arts and instead favored plein-air landscapes, domestic scenes, natural light, and unbridled colors and brushstrokes. The work of these artists instigated a movement defined by its vivacity and emphasis on the ephemeral beauty in everyday life. This calendar features a dozen works by the impressionists from the collection of the National Gallery of Art, Washington.
