In January 2001, the author travelled to Pakistan to visit the Punjab, the North West Frontier Province and the Tribal Areas.

Tourism in Pakistan was not very developed at that time and there were areas, which were unstable and where tourism was not recommended. In addition, Pakistan was sheltering around three million Afghani refugees on the outskirts of Peshawar at great cost to its economy.

The choice of Pakistan as a destination was determined by the desire to understand the people, the history and the culture of this fascinating and very diverse country. As time was limited, and winter had set in, this visit would take in some of the key areas of Pakistan that fascinated the author and which were still accessible.

However, the world, and this region of the world in particular, had been affected for decades by regional conflicts and it was about to face a new prolonged threat to its stability in September 2001, which would seriously impact the region for many years to come. This journal is a snapshot of Pakistan before the great disruptions of the early years of the new millennium.
