The Sword of Satan The Good Alulim

The Sword of Satan is an unforgiving and scathing interpretation of monotheism throughout history, and minces no words in the demonization of the three primary Western monotheistic religions, Judaism, Christianity, and Islam. Though each of these religions endeavors to convince the world of its superiority, Yahweh, Christ, and Allah are actually one semi-conscious vampiric fog—known collectively as the Manifold Curiosity—that has enveloped the Earth. It is through the bloodshed and hatred that are the pre-meditated interplay of these religions that this alien thing feeds and is nourished, and grows. Following in the tradition of Aleister Crowley, The Sword of Satan is the product of applied Thelemic Magick combined with eleven years of study and personal trial. It is an inspired text that outlines in poetic form the problem of religion, and posits a solution to this problem, using primarily the metaphor of cancer and that which will rid the body of cancer. Thus, it defines Satanism as a form of spiritual world healing. Further, it lays the foundations for a graded initiatory system, utilizing sixteen elusive “Ethics” referred to throughout, and making reference to rituals that have been interpreted as antediluvian and “have been recalled from the memory of the world and translated into the language of practicality.” These rituals are understood, and are currently being recorded as they are experienced for future publication.
