Excerpt from An Ancient History: From the Creation to the Fall of the Western Empire in A. D. 476, With Numerous Maps and Plans of Cities

After a brief account of the Prehistorical Age drawn from Genesis, Ancient Egypt - the first nation that has a history is treated. Then come in order the Phoenicians and the Hebrews; the Chaldeans, Assyrians, 'and Babylonians; the Medes and the Persians: the Greeks and the Macedonians; lastly. Ancient Rome: the separate account of each being continued till its absorption by some stronger power. As for those nations which played but a secondary part in the world;-such as Ethiopia, L 'dia, Armenia, Pergamus, Pontus, and Parthia, in the east: icily, Spain, Gaul, Britain, and Carthage, in the west their history is interwoven with that of the countries with which they were more closely connected. Thus has all useless repetition been avoided, clearness secured, and room obtained for a sketch of the progress of art and letters, a description of government and manners. An account of religion and education, and the introduction of many points peculiarly useful to the student Of the ancient classics.
